

Corinne Allan holds an MSc in Marketing from the University of Leicester, and in 2016 embarked on a PhD at the University of Portsmouth. Previously, she spent 12 years in China working in complementary healthcare and health and safety training, where she developed effective academic, management and administrative skills. When she relocated to Britain, she gained fresh employment in complementary healthcare, and also worked part-time as a Chinese/English tutor. She is fluent in Mandarin and English, both written and verbal.

In her spare time, Corinne enjoys reading, Tai Chi, travel and music. She is currently translating The Bright Fish into Chinese, plus another novel.
