

Annie Chi Allan spent the first half of her life in China before relocating to the UK, a transition that fully familiarised her with the language and culture of both countries. She holds two degrees: one in Politics and International Relations, the other in Translation and Interpretation. In addition to English and Mandarin, she is also well-versed in the implementation of CAT (Computer Assisted Translation) tools. She is currently learning French. Annie has translated and edited three books, created subtitles for foreign-language news clips, and served as a consecutive interpreter and simultaneous interpreter for a wide variety of overseas speakers. She has worked part-time as a Chinese/English teacher, and as a volunteer tourist-guide in her local community. Beyond her direct interests in language, she has also interned at the United Nations in Vienna, worked as a marketing author and editor for a well-known lifestyle website, and as a research assistant for a PhD project in Civil Engineering. These experiences strengthened her capacity to analyse large amounts of data, and required highly organised work habits. Annie is currently co-translating World War O into Chinese.
